DIPLOMATS ANNOYED

Our Ambassadors to Berlin and Vienna Have Much Trouble.

CANNOT OBTAIN SUITABLE HOMES

Uncle Sam Should Own Buildings Abroad for Embassies It is Claimed—German Taxing Official Caught in a Net He Had Spread for Others—That Extraordinary Guerin Trial at Paris—Guerin's Exhibition of "Audacity" Sat Upon.

Berlin, Dec. 4.—[Copyright, 1899, by The Associated Press.]—The desirability of the United States having suitable permanent embassies abroad is again unpleasantly illustrated by the humiliating experience of Ambassador White, and by the fact just revealed that Minister Harris, at Vienna, is undergoing a worse experience. White's trouble is likely to be tided over, as it is understood that the little government of Baden has offered to allow the American ambassador to continue to occupy the top flat of the building it purchased, until the end of President McKinley's term.

Same Trouble at Vienna.

Since Harris arrived in Vienna he has been vainly searching for a suitable house. The difficulty is the unwillingness of Austrian landlords to rent to Americans. Harris' predecessor, Bartlett Tripp, had a dispute with his landlord, and the latter sued Tripp successfully. Even the Vienna tradesmen are disinclined to supply any one connected with the legation unless paid in advance. Both these incidents are causing much astonished talk in diplomatic circles at Vienna and Berlin, and many disparaging remarks have been made against the United States policy in this respect.

Hoist by His Own Petard.

Dr. Von Miquel, whose skill in financially squeezing the German subjects for the benefit of the state is proverbial, has fallen a victim to his own taxgatherers. They have rejected Dr. Von Miquel's income tax return, declaring he omitted the income of the Silesian estate, which Dr. Von Miquel claims is unproductive. The controversy, which the courts will probably have to decide, involves only a small amount, but the department insists on its alleged rights against its own chief.

Diplomats Tell Their Experience.

Dr. Von Mumm Von Schwartzstein, recently acting German ambassador at Washington, lunched with the emperor Saturday. The conversation turned incidentally on American affairs and the surprising development of the United States. Among the guests was Prince Regent Albrecht of Brunswick, who told about his recent mission to Spain. He said the young king evinced considerable intelligence, but that he was still kept from all state affairs and treated altogether as a child.

ANOTHER FRENCH CAUSE CELEBRE.

Trial of Guerin Presents Some Features of Novelty.

Paris, Dec. 4.—In the high court (senate) Saturday, M. Guerin asked for an adjournment of the proceedings to permit the selection of new counsel. The public prosecutor objected and M. Guerin argued, amidst a fearful din from the prisoners, among whom M. Andre Buffet, vice president of the Young Royalist League, and representative of the Duke of Orleans' political bureau, was distinguishable as especially violent. The public prosecutor demanded M. Buffet's expulsion, whereupon the uproar increased, and the president of the court, M. Fallieres, ordered the prisoners to be ejected, which was done after considerable trouble. The session was then suspended, and the court ordered that M. Buffet be expelled from the sessions for a week.

M. Fallieres eventually rejected M. Guerin's application, whereupon M. Guerin asked to be allowed to withdraw. M. Fallieres promptly refused this extraordinary request, and M. Guerin retorted theatrically that he wished it to be understood that he only remained in court under compulsion. The president of the court paid no attention to this characteristic protest, and resumed hearing the witnesses. An ex-soldier named Michel, who was on duty at Neuilly barracks the day of the Deroulede-Roget incident, testified that M. Deroulede made a violent speech to the officers, reproaching them with not joining in his proposed march on the Elysee palace.

General Roget, who was afterward called to the stand, denied that he or any other officer heard the remarks attributed to M. Deroulede. Michel, however, maintained the truth of his assertion. Counsel for the defense protested against reopening the Neuilly affair, which he said had already been tried.

Utah Divorce Was Void.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 4.—Judge Shiras in the federal court decided for Mrs. Catherine Davis Green, of Winterset, in the case in which the government had sued her to recover $1,500 pension money which had been paid to her as the widow of Cyrus Green. When she was the wife of James Davis she secured a divorce in Utah. The government alleged that the Utah divorce was invalid, that she was not legally married to Green, Judge Shiras declared her legally divorced, legally remarried and legally a widow.

Largest Creamery in the World.

Sioux City, Ia., Dec. 4.—The largest creamery in the world is to be located in Sioux City. It will use cream from 250 stations in this city's tributary territory. The creamery will have a capacity of more than a carload of butter a day.

RIGHTS OF CORPORATIONS

Defined in an Important Case by a Supreme Court Decision.

Lansing, Mich., Dec. 4.—An important case defining the rights of private corporations in the streets of municipalities was decided by the supreme court Saturday. In April, 1888, the common council of Eaton Rapids entered into an arrangement with Charles and Edward Horner, who had put a dynamo in their grist mill, to furnish a number of street lights for one year. In August, 1898, the city having made a contract with another party to light the streets, notified the Horner brothers that their contract then existing was terminated, and that they must remove their poles, wires and lamps from the street within ten days.

A bill was thereupon filed against the city enjoining it against removing the poles, and upon a hearing of the case a decree was entered in favor of the complainants giving them a perpetual right in the streets of Eaton Rapids. This decree is reversed by the supreme court.

INSPIRED BY UNION LABOR.

Suit to Declare the Kansas City Typothetae a Trust.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 4.—A suit was filed in the circuit court Saturday on information of E. C. Crow, attorney general of the state, charging that the Kansas City Typothetae is a trust, and as such ought to be dissolved and its members fined and the franchises of the corporations that compose it revoked.

The Kansas City Typothetae is composed of sixteen of the leading job printing firms of this city. While the attorney general of the state appears in the suit as the representative of the state, the suit was inspired by the union printers and pressmen, who are out on strike.

Thief Given Seven Years.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 4.—Fred Beall, who three weeks ago entered St. Joseph's store late one evening, asked to be shown a tray of diamonds, and when they were handed to him broke for the street, nearly escaping with $2,000 worth of stones, has been sentenced to seven and a half years' imprisonment. His mother, Mrs. William F. Heins, of Omaha, entered a plea for mercy in his behalf. Failing to secure leniency for the court, she appealed to Governor Shaw for executive clemency.

New Normal Schools Needed.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 4.—State Superintendent of Public Instruction Barrett in his biennial report urges the legislature to provide money to build three new state normal schools, there being but one now. He also recommends a law to make the township unit of school organization, doing away with subdistricts, and providing for graded schools in each township and transportation of pupils to them at district expense.

The Daily Telegram.

OF A BUSINESS NATURE.

If you would have your work well done, do it yourself. This homely adage touches the newspaper situation in Ypsilanti. The benefits to accrue to a city from the circulation of a newspaper, are essentially local, because the business and municipal interests to be represented by the journal are exclusively local.

In this, the day of easy communication and rapid transit, the law of "the survival of the fittest" operates between cities as business centres, as between individuals. The real problem that to day confronts the Greek City is: How shall we construct and maintain a business community so thoroughly equipped as to stand proof against the competition of rival neighbors, and at the same time as enterprising as to mark its history by steady and well founded improvement? Our city can enjoy its full measure of prosperity only when its several and varied business concerns bear, each to all the others, the relation of mutual support. In order to maintain our business community against outside competitors, they must, as far as practicable, be excluded from the local field, and here the question of advertising presents itself.

To make advertising through local papers effective, the reliability of the advertiser and the attractiveness or form of the advertisement are factors. As to the ability of our merchants to give the best that the market affords, we have no question. The daily paper is ranked among the best of advertising mediums for obvious reasons: The daily reaches a large number of homes as regularly as sunset; its columns are of direct personal interest to its subscribers and consequently they are read. Special sales or other trade inducements for particular days, find in the daily paper a reliable herald, and the consumer soon learns the advantage to himself of consulting the daily before he makes his purchase.

The Daily Telegram appears in the field under the presumption that Ypsilanti needs a daily paper. Notwithstanding the presence of two Ann Arbor sheets, our business men have frequently commented on their disadvantage under the present situation, and have expressed a willingness to desire to contribute towards the success of a reliable home daily. The Telegram aims to assist Ypsilanti to compete against the incursions of business rivals.

In the matter of advertising, our business men must be on the defensive as well as aggressive. They must blow their own trumpet, but they must also resist as far as possible, the appeal of the foreign daily with a local column. The foreign daily is of no real service to Ypsilanti, because while it offers little of value to local interests, it brings daily before its Ypsilanti patrons, six columns of foreign advertisement to one of local.

The Daily Telegram is open to Ypsilanti advertisers alone. It is issued from an Ypsilanti office and is the product of Ypsilanti industry and enterprise. It must attain to a large field of influence and usefulness if our business men avail themselves of its opportunities.

EXPLANATORY.

How we came to be here, And How Glad we are that Ypsilanti has decided to support Us.

In justice to ourselves, an explanation will be given regarding the Commercial Publishing Company's contract with the editor of the Washtenaw Times, as reported by the Times reporter, under the dictation of his chief. On several occasions previous, the editor has been approached by the Ann Arbor gentleman, regarding the Times' future in Ypsilanti. Finally an agreement was entered into with him in good faith on our part, by which the Daily Telegram was to peacefully supplant the Times in this city. The arrangement provided for a mutual exchange of Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor proof-sheets, which would have obviated the expense to each office of covering the two territories in obtaining news. This contract was entered into in view of the benefit of both parties. After expressing himself as perfectly satisfied with the plan and its prospects, the gentleman dictated the Detroit despatch to the local Times reporter, which practically announced the Daily Telegram. The wily editor then betook himself to his den in Ann Arbor and he has not called at our office since. But he left us a note by an employe two days later informing us that he could not perform his end of the contract.

Previous to the editor's tout a coup the Commercial Company at once proceeded to act on the strength of the above agreement. His default has raised the daily expense of issuing the Telegram, between three and four dollars beyond our original calculation; but nevertheless the Ypsilanti daily is a fact despite our brother editor's default and this frank statement of the case will indicate to Ypsilanti that the Telegram ought to receive the undivided support of the city it is designed to represent.

LECTURE AT ST. LUKE'S.

Prof. Thompson deals Intelligently with a Problem.

Prof. Bradley Thompson, of Ann Arbor, spoke to a large and appreciative audience gathered in St. Luke's church last evening, the subject of his lecture being "Expansion, and the larger responsibilities and opportunities of the American People." The lecture was a brilliant and closely reasoned statement of the whole problem. The lecturer showed very clearly that the United States is a sovereign power, with all the powers appertaining to sovereignty, to make peace, declare war and govern. That the territory already in its possession has been mostly acquired by the exercise of this sovereign power. Prof. Thompson then went on to show that the acquisition of Spanish territory in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands was prophetic of a great future for American commerce and American civilization and that the possession of the Philippines would result in the introduction of American commerce and manufactures all through the East, and that the Philippine Islands themselves would be a strategic base of supplies for the American navy, necessary in the future, more so than in the past, to the protection of American commerce on the high seas.

The lecturer concluded by a statement of the religious problem in the Philippines. The fact that about 4 millions of the inhabitants are members of the Roman Catholic church, some one or two millions Mohammedans, and the rest practically uncivilized and barbarians would justify the assertion that there is a great opportunity for the American churches to carry the Gospel to the inhabitants of the Philippines, who as yet have not been brought under the influence or guidance of any church. The lecture which was full of information, was closely reasoned and a most able and statesmanlike presentation of the whole subject of the new duties that have come to the American nation in consequence of the events of the last two years.

LISTERMAN CONCERT.

A Crowded House enjoyed the fine Music.

The Listerman string quartet—consisting of Bernhard Listerman, Harold Knapp, Hugo Frey and Franz Wagner, gave a charming musical entertainment in Normal hall Saturday evening as the third number on the Normal lecture course. The four artists are soloists of national repute and as a quartet they display wonderful expression and phrasing, and execute with matchless accuracy and precision. The master piece of the evening was Mr. Listerman's rendition of Bazini's Grand Fantasia for Violin. The difficult passages of this famous selection were rendered with a bold and sweeping touch which produced tones now exquisite for their delicacy and firmness, now full and sonorous, and again fervid and impassioned. Mr. Listerman technique is wonderful and he plays with the precision of a true master.

Mr. Franz Wagner rendered Davidoff's 'cello solo, At the Fountain. His playing is finished and artistic, and displays great power of expression.

Miss Judd, soprano, gave two groups of songs, which displayed well her peculiarly sweet and clear voice. Her selections were La-Filles de Cadix, by Delibes; Petites Roses, If I was a Bee, by Gaynor and Massenet's Good Night.

As opening the quartet rendered the Allegro, Allegretto Andante and Manuet of Hayden's Quartet in G Major, of which the Andante was specially effective. They also appeared in Theme and variations on Death and the Maiden, and in the finale from Rubenstein's Quartet in F Major.

Ypsilanti Assembly of the International Congress was instituted last Friday evening, in the K. of P. Hall, by Sup. Dep. G. G. Shaw and Dr. Jay W. Morrison of Detroit, with 27 charter members. The officers elected were: Hon. Com., Dr. Ellen B. Murray; Hon. past Com., Mrs. Carrie DeMosh; Hon. Lim. Com., C. C. Vroman; Hon. R. K. Walter S. Haynes; Hon. F. K. Miss Francis Boman; Hon. chaplain, Mrs. Alice Haynes; Hon. physician, Dr. Ellen B. Murray; Hon. vice Com., Mrs. Louise Drury; Hon. M. A. Frank Drury.

Reception.

Mrs. Fanny Cheever Burton, director of the women's department of the Normal gymnasium, entertained the young ladies of the advanced classes in physical training, in the gymnasium, Saturday afternoon from 4 to 6. The light dainty gowns of the 100 young ladies present and the modest but charming decorations of the gymnasium combined to form a very attractive picture. There was dancing for those who wished and for others there were the innumerable cosy corners with their unlimited opportunities for a "good talk."

Mrs. Burton received, assisted by Mesdames Grawn and Bowen and Misses Foster and Norton. Mrs. Bowen and Misses Shultz and Norton were assisted by young ladies of the lower elementary physical training class in serving tea and wafers.

ST. LUKE'S YESTERDAY.

In one form or another Advent Sunday was observed yesterday in all the churches of the city.

In the Episcopal church the regular Advent service was held with special music—the Benedicite, Best; Anthem, "And the Glory of the Lord," Handel; a solo, sung by Mr. Webb. The Rev. Gardam's sermon in the morning was no lines suggested by Advent and in the evening Prof. Bradley Thompson, of Ann Arbor, lectured on, "The larger religious missions of the American people."

The regular quarterly communion service was held in the Presbyterian church in the morning and the usual music was rendered. The subject of the Rev. Wharton's sermon was the first verse of the 23rd psalm—"The Lord is my Shepherd."

GALE-MALINOWSKI.

Wednesday evening, Nov. 22, 1899, Miss Minnie Malinowski became the wife of Mr. William A. Gale of Superior. The event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Strang, Superior, in the presence of about forty invited guests. To the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march executed by Miss La Furge the bridal party appeared and took their places in the prettily decorated parlor, where in a few moments the beautiful ring service of the Methodist Episcopal church, pronounced by Rev. Howard A. Field of Dixboro made them one flesh. The groomsmen and bridesmaid were Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Gale, who were married about one month ago. The bridal pair are both well known and highly respected young people who have many friends, all of whom extended their best wishes. Mr. and Mrs. Gale left Friday morning for Middleville and other points, for a short tour. They will soon be "at home" to their friends in the Olin Strang house.

Justin Gate, treasurer of Superior township, will be at Alban & Johnson's clothing store, on Saturdays from December 9 to January 10, to receive the township taxes.

IOWA HOUSE SPEAKERSHIP.

Fight on United States Senator Enters Largely into the Matter.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 4.—The contest for the speakership of the Iowa house, which will organize the second Tuesday in January, is now the affair of greatest political concern in the state. The rival aspirants for United States senator, John H. Gear and A. B. Cummins both desire to organize the house and dictate the speaker, because it will be a powerful lever for use in the senatorial fight.

W. L. Eaton, of Osage, is the avowed Cummins candidate. On the Gear side are three or four candidates, the leaders being Temple, of Clark, Bowen, of Alameda, and Blake, of Webster.

Temple has been regarded as the favorite with the Gear men until within a few days, when the impression has gone out that they will finally endeavor to unite on Bowen because he can control two or three votes.

Robert N. Francisco, of Wayne, a member of the last village council, has commenced a suit against the D. Y. & A. A. His purpose is to test the company's right to charge a fare of 30 cents from Wayne to Ypsilanti, while it charges 25 cents from that village to Detroit, a distance greater by six miles. It is claimed that the fare to Ypsilanti is above the rate allowed by the franchisees.

It has leaked out that Miss Bertha Donaldson and Peter Poole, of Pinckney, were quietly married last week, at Windsor, Canada. Miss Donaldson is the girl who figured in an episode last spring, running away from Ypsilanti, where she was attending school, and it was then claimed that she was married to a soldier who was killed or died in the Cuban war. Whether this is true or not she is now married to a lad 17 years of age, four years younger than herself.—Detroit Journal.

M. T. Woodruff has issued another number of the Manistee Journal, after months of trouble, which he explains in the issue. He says that the god of fortune refused to smile after he sold the Ypsilanti Sentinel. Editor Woodruff in his editorial notice tells the people of Manistee that his issuing a paper in their midst depends upon the stockholders of the concern, some sixty in number, and that if they will give him full swing he will continue business in the old place.

Attendance at this meeting counts four points.

The Ypsilanti Poultry Association has called a meeting for Wednesday evening in the National Bank building. They will make final arrangements for their annual exhibition, which will be held in a few weeks. They offer this year a larger number of regular and special premiums than ever before, and will in other ways make the show the greatest success of the association's existence.

"A Texas Steer" will be driven into the corral at the Ypsilanti opera house, Tuesday evening, December 5. It is not a Maverick, for it has a Hoyt brand upon it. "A smile encircled by a broad grin on the left shoulder." It will gallop through four acts of real fun and absurdities. One of the earliest efforts of this author, if it is an effort for him to write comedy, "A Texas Steer" satirizing Washington society and illustrating the metamorphosis of of Maverick Brander from a simple rancher to a senator, has lost nothing in all the many seasons. Age only seems to have improved it. There is a singular charm about the comedies of Charles Hoyt, no matter how often they are seen, there is always something new to laugh at so that they give the impression that the author is constantly rewriting them. Again, it is seldom that they are ever badly played, which may be owing to the fact that Hoyt engages and rehearses the companies himself. Katie Putnam plays the part of "Bossy" and imparts to it the charm of an original personality, one that is magnetic and has an eccentric little method of her own of finishing her comedy speeches that is positively charming. Bill H. Bray, so long associated with his original creation of "The Minister to Dahomey" is still in the cast.

Today is "pension day."

The committee from the council to whom the matter was referred will this week have the new brass sliding pole set up in the third story of the hose house. This is done that the men of the fire department may fit out a gymnasium on the third floor of the building, a proceeding which is impossible until a more rapid mode of locomotion than a stairway extends to the stables.

Normal and high school students recommenced work this morning after Thanksgiving Day recess. At the former institution the authorities say that the students who failed to appear at the proper time will be suspended or expelled. LOVE FINDS A WAY.

BY JEANNETTE H. WALWORTH.

Copyright, 1899, by Jeannette H. Walworth.

AN INTRODUCTION.

One would scarcely credit the flourishing and growing town of Mandeville—city by courtesy—with a well authenticated and respectfully vouched for ghost story, and yet it had one—has one perhaps, one might say, for three of its oldest citizens must join the choir invisible before it becomes a matter of pure tradition.

To quote from the geography, "Mandeville is remarkable chiefly for the excellent quality of the glazed tiles and the superior cylinder stoves which it manufactures in large quantities and ships annually to all parts of the United States and Great Britain."

Mandeville does not set as much store by its ghost as it does by its tiles and stoves, which it advertises with laudable liberality, but should any stranger chance to express his views on the subject of the finest old mansion in its suburbs, Broxton Hall, in the hearing of Uncle Bennie Braddock, as half the town calls him, he will be very apt to hear something that will astonish him, coming, as it does, from such very respectable lips, in an atmosphere from which one looks for nothing but trade and market quotations.

Uncle Bennie has reached the remnant of age, and he always seizes with avidity upon the chance to describe "the most remarkable experience of my life, sir."

If his listener happens to be a skeptic who has nothing but a veiled sneer for the Broxton ghost, Uncle Bennie will refer him to "Major Dan Mercer, sir (I guess nobody ever cast discredit on a statement of his), or Simon, who was care taker at the Hall after Colonel Rufus Broxton died. They saw what I saw, and I take it that three more unimaginative men can't be picked up in all Melton county."

And so, whether you believe it or not, stranger, it will be well to comport yourself respectfully toward the Broxton ghost so long as you are in the neighborhood of Major Dan Mercer.

The people who live in the handsome old house itself are not such old world aristocrats as to consider a ghost good form in shape of family indorsement. Whatever they may know or think about this elusive member of their fine old family they keep strictly to themselves.

Whether or not the Mandeville ghost story is worth relating or listening to each reader of the following pages must determine for himself.

CHAPTER I.

THE SHADOW OF DEATH.

When Miss Malvina Spillman, who lived midway between the small town of Mandeville and the large estate of Broxton Hall, saw Dr. Govan for the second time that day drive rapidly up the avenue of laurel trees that stretched from the big outer gates to the very doorstep of the Broxton house, she lifted up her voice:

"I think Colonel Broxton must be worse, mother. Dr. Govan's gone by again."

"Me, me, my, my!"

"That makes twice since breakfast, and he does not often drive that old sorrel of his fast enough to lather him. He is doing it now, though."

"Twice, Malvina? Me, me! And that poor motherless boy off at school the Lord only knows how many miles!"

"I think Thomas has been sent for, mother. When I was up to ask about the colonel yesterday, Jessy told me he had."

"But maybe he won't get here in time. Go back to the window, Malvina. Something else might happen."

Miss Malvina's mother was getting old and had got deaf. Just now she was plumed to her armchair with a sprained ankle. To use her own pathos, she was nothing like the woman she used to be.

Sometimes Miss Malvina could project a bit of gossip across the room without having to leave her sewing machine or ironing board. It depended largely on the state of the atmosphere. As a rule, she had to filter it carefully through the perforated ear trumpet that was swung by a black ribbon about her mother's neck.

The wheel of Miss Malvina's sewing machine filled the little cottage with its pleasant whirr for a few moments of renewed activity. Then something else did happen, and she bustled across the room once more to report it. Her mother held the trumpet in a state of eager readiness.

"And Daniel has just gone galloping by on the colonel's black mare, mother."

"Which way?"

"Toward town. He'll just kill that mare, and the colonel loves her next best to Tom."

"You say he's on the black mare Winnie? Why, Broxton never would have let Daniel or any other man get astride that brute if he had his senses about him." "Mother" Spillman shook her white head dolorously and added: "Gone after Horace Matthews, I suppose. Broxton had better be sending for the minister, if he is but a poor crooked stick, and settling his account with heaven instead of worrying with the lawyers at such a time."

Mrs. Spillman could afford to put her own estimate upon the new preacher. She spoke as one who had been in authority. Mandeville had but one church, and for years her husband had filled its pulpit. She knew every foot of the ground between Broxton Hall and the little church over which the "crooked stick" now presided, to her austere dissatisfaction.

The window in which her big armchair was immovably planted gave her a glimpse of the tiny white steeple in one direction and the wistaria wrapped walls of Broxton Hall in the other. Honeysuckle and clematis vines clambered over her window sill. She loved the scent of them. Bees hummed about the double petunias and gay phloxes around her doorsteps. She could not hear them, but she knew they were there, so she lost nothing.

The front of the Spillman cottage was pierced by one door and two windows. Miss Malvina's sewing machine occupied one of these. Evidently events were not moving rapidly enough for the older woman. She interrupted the resumed whirr of the sewing machine querulously.

"I think you might give over tucking a white petticoat when a neighbor's soul is passing, Malvina, and that neighbor Rufus Broxton. It is a sorry day for us."

Miss Malvina looked penitent and put the lid on her machine as softly as if the sick man had been in the spare room of the little cottage instead of in his own stately four poster a half mile away.

"I meant no disrespect, mother. Nobody thinks more of Colonel Broxton than I do or will miss him worse. It's just my way to keep busy."

"Ah, ah, we'll miss him, Malvina! You'll miss him, I'll miss him, and all Mandeville will miss him. But what does he want with Horace Matthews at such a time? Oh, if your own dear father was only here now!"

"I guess he wants the lawyer to get Tom's affairs well in hand. Colonel Broxton is rich, mother, and Tom is young—so young and helpless."

"Only 14 years old, poor lad!"

"And I suppose the colonel is trying to arrange everything for Tom's best interests. I guess he never once thought, being so well and strong just a week ago, but what he would be here himself to look after Tom for many a long year yet. Jessy says Mr. Matthews and the colonel are just like brothers."

"Mother" Spillman jerked her trumpet away from Miss Malvina's lips with fierce petulance.

"Jessy is a gossiping simpleton. Brothers, indeed! Don't speak of them in the same breath. I know Horace Matthews. Then, with shrill, rising voice, "I know more about Horace Matthews and Rufus Broxton than Jessy could ever find out if her mother cooked at Broxton Hall till kingdom come."

"I know my father prepared them both for college," said Malvina proudly. Then quietly she seated herself on a hassock near her mother and possessed herself of the pile of gray wool the old lady worked up into articles of doubtful beauty and undoubted utility, just as the whim seized her. In off moments Miss Malvina would seize the needle and hasten the hour of completion.

Confident of a flood of familiar reminiscence, she settled resignedly to crocheting. It was her way to keep busy. Once fairly launched on the backward flowing tide, she could trust her mother to entertain herself for an indefinite period of time.

"I have known Horace Matthews and Rufus Broxton since they were both boys in knickerbockers and roundabouts coming to Mr. Spillman for Latin and mathematics. That was before you ever saw the light, Malvina. They were always together as boys, and I marveled at it then. Rufus was a handsome, high spirited, clean souled lad who would have cut off his right hand if he detected it doing a dishonest thing. Matthews was just everything that Rufus wasn't. I never understood the liking Broxton had for him."

Malvina put in a word for the maligned. "Mr. Matthews must have been very winning in his young days, mother. He's got such friendly manners and he is so dreadfully good looking even now."

"Oh, there's no gainsaying his good looks. They came pretty near landing him on the topmost round of his ambition once upon a time. He just missed being Rufus Broxton's brother-in-law and coming in for half of old Marsden Broxton's estate. When Lucetta Broxton came home from boarding school—my, but she was something to look at!"

—Horace Matthews did not let the grass grow on the road from Mandeville to Broxton Hall.

"He was a struggling young lawyer then, waiting for his first client. She was the handsomest girl in the country and the richest. Before she had been home a half year they were engaged to be married. Before she had been home a whole year she was dead of pleurisy, contracted by going to a come out party at Butterworth's, ten miles from Broxton, wearing her ball dress and slippers in the carriage."

As Miss Malvina had not come to woman's estate without achieving perfect familiarity with the melancholy fate of beautiful Lucetta Broxton, she did not intermit the motion of her needle to exclaim or bemoan over the threadbare story.

"Horace Matthews was married in less than two years after to a girl who had expectations that were never realized, and Rufus was married a month later. Both of them lost their wives about six years later within a month of each other. Queer, wasn't it?"

Miss Malvina yawned and said "Very." The bees hummed in the honeysuckle vines, the crocuses seemed to wove its rapid way in and out of the gay web and the old woman crooned.

"I won't deny you that Matthews is the sharper of the two, but Rufus Broxton has got more soul in his little finger than Horace Matthews has in his whole body. Rufus was as brave as a lion, but sweet tempered as a girl, trusting as a baby, always. Honorable? I should say he was. I don't suppose he ever played crooked for the finest white alley that was ever made. I doubt if Horace Matthews could claim as much for himself."

"And Tom's going to grow up to be just such another," said Miss Malvina, with conviction.

Into the peaceful droning of the bees and the monotonous crooning of the deaf woman was precipitated the sound of iron shod hoofs pounding the earth rapidly. Miss Malvina dropped the gay wools recklessly and, with the ball unwinding as she traveled, rushed to the front door, craning her thin neck after the fast disappearing horseman.

"It's Daniel, mother, galloping back to the Hall. The mare's flanks are fairly reeking with sweat and foam. And—yes, he'll catch up. Now they are neck and neck."

"Who is neck and neck with what, Malvina?"

Miss Malvina drew her head in reluctantly and returned to the trumpet.

Neck to neck with mare Winnie, Lawyer Matthew's big roan had dashed out of sight. The two horses knew each other well. Many a peaceful excursion had they taken side by side through the lovely country roads engridding Mandeville or over the broad expanse of the Broxton estate, half of which destiny had maliciously snatched from the grasp of the roan's rider.

In the westerling light the lawyer's face looked hard and white and set. The wind had lifted the front brim of his soft felt hat and flattened it against the crown. Scarcely had the cloud of dust raised by the two horses subsided before the Mandeville public hack went lumbering by in a vain competition of speed. Its curtains flapped wildly in the wind, leaving its one occupant in full view.

At sight of him Miss Malvina caught her breath hysterically and bent her head with an impulse of prayer. Then she retraced her steps to the deaf woman.

"Daniel's ridden back, mother, and Mr. Matthews was with him."

"Trust him," said the old woman sourly. "He'll make a good thing of it, Rufus so trusting and Tom so young and him already feeling like he'd been cheated by Lucetta Broxton's taking off."

"Aren't you a trifle hard on Lawyer Matthews, mother? He stands well in the community. Everybody has a good word for him, except you. He is the best father to that pretty Ollie I ever saw."

"Oh, he'll look out for his own. Olivia is bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh. I hope she ain't spirit of his spirit."

The old woman was inexorable. Presently Miss Malvina sent a still more solemn announcement through the trumpet.

"And, mother, Jim Hobson's just driven by with both horses to the hack and Parson Drayton on the back seat."

"May the Lord have mercy on his soul! Amen!"

This pious ejaculation lacked explicitness, but as Hobson's soul was a matter of no particular moment to any one and the Rev. Mr. Drayton's was already presumably insured against the possibility of miscarriage Miss Malvina fitted it where it belonged.

"I hope Tom will get here before it is all over," she said softly.

But her mother's head had fallen forward on her clasped and trembling hands. Tears came warily to eyes long used to the vexing ways of the world. The minister's widow wept silently for the breaking of another link in the chain that time had robbed of all but a few frail links.

"Now they are neck and neck."

The sun dropped behind the tallest trees that crowned the bluff against which Mandeville nestled. The many windows of Broxton Hall caught its level rays and flamed into a brief glory of molten gold. The great house looked as if it were illuminated for the coming of some distinguished guest.

The shadows of evening already lay thick among the dark oaks and cedars on the lawn. A funereal blackness enveloped a cluster of Norway firs. Presently the borrowed brightness faded from the windows of the Hall, leaving its somber bulk sharply outlined against the pallid skies.

As a tired child might have sobbed itself to sleep, "Mother" Spillman passed from tears to slumber. Propping the gray head tenderly against its silken chair rest, Miss Malvina softly escaped from the room. She was in a state of restless, nervous tension.

She wandered as far as the cottage gate, pulling a gaudy zinnia and a gay princess feather in transit, only to throw them away. She leaned over the low gate and peered anxiously down the dusty road.

Over an hour now since the minister and the lawyer had gone by in such haste and "still no sign of poor Tom's coming."

Colonel Rufus Broxton was the "big" man of the neighborhood. His sudden illness had aroused great local interest. Personally she had none other than the tenderest memories in connection with him. The gift of a cow when their own only one had fallen over the bluff and been killed, the headstone that marked her father's grave in the Mandeville burying ground, the annual spring "breaking up" of her little garden patch, all testified to the goodness of the colonel's heart and the faithfulness of his soul.

He had never lost sight of the fact that her mother was the impoverished widow of the man who had been the intellectual guide of his callow youth nor how as the minister's wife she had been a helpful friend and good adviser to the young and sometimes frivolous wife he had brought home to stately old Broxton Hall.

And now in the hour of his extremity Miss Malvina could not bear to think of the colonel having an unfulfilled wish. Jessy had told her that all his cry was: "Why doesn't the boy come? The boy will be too late. Keep me here, doctor, until Tom gets home."

And Jessy knew, because she was housemaid at the Hall and heard everything. If only the boy had been sent for sooner! Mr. Matthews must have known how things were going to end.

And at thought of the lawyer she fell to wondering over her mother's harsh judgment of the man who for sterling merit stood next to Parson Drayton in the town and county. There were those in Mandeville who thought the sun rose and set in him. Her mother must be getting unreasonable in her old age, and so, dismissing the lawyer from her mind as a minor matter at such a solemn juncture, she stood there breathing futile wishes that she might do something, ever so little a something, for the colonel or for Tom.

The road in front of the cottage was deserted. At its best travel toward Mandeville was light and uncertain. There was none at all tonight.

The scent of honeysuckles and sweet williams weighted the air. A single star came out in the blue black sky, another, a dozen, a host. A solemn hush enveloped the universe. If only some break would come in the dreadful stillness! It came.

The patter of hurrying feet in the dusty road—a small, dark figure was speeding toward her out of the gloom. It came abreast of her. Miss Malvina could hear the quick panting breath of the runner. Next the gleam of a white face, bare of hat, shone under the stars.

"Who is that? Who are you? Tom—Tom Broxton?"

The running feet halted. The white face came closer. A breathless young voice called to her eagerly: "Is that you, Miss Malvina? How about father? Better, isn't he?"

Miss Malvina answered inconsequently:

"What are you doing afoot, child? Couldn't Daniel have gone to fetch you?"

"Mr. Matthews' man Rube was at the station with his buggy. I think he must have been drunk. He upset the buggy in a lime hole this side the schoolhouse. I left him floundering about in it. I could not wait. Is father—"

The Vaudeville Theater.

Sometimes the vaudeville theater is an individual and independent enterprise; more often it belongs to a circuit. The patronage, expenses and receipts are enormous. One circuit will speak for all. It has a theater in New York, one in Philadelphia, one in Boston, and one in Providence, and they give no Sunday performances, and yet these four theaters entertain over 5,000,000 people every year, give employment to 350 attaches and to 3,500 actors.

Four thousand people pass in and out of each one of these theaters daily. Ten thousand dollars are distributed each week in salaries to the actors and $3,500 to the attaches. Take one theater for example, the house in Boston. It is open the year round, and it costs $7,000 a week to keep it open, while its patrons will average 25,000 every week. On a holiday it will play to from 10,000 to 12,000 people.—From "The Vaudeville Theater," by Edwin Milton Royle, in Scribner's.

The Others to Blame.

"Yes, I can; but I always happen to tell things to other girls who can't."—Chicago Record.

Peculiarities of the Japanese Bath.

To their credit, be it said, Japs are regular whales at bathing, and usually when not drinking tea are bathing. Their only trouble in life seems to be their inability to enjoy both these delights at the same time. If some American trick swimmer could teach the Japs how to swallow tea out of a bottle while under water, they would build a tin temple round him, burn incense made of old rags and bones under his nose and worship him.

Public baths are numerous in which "mixed bathing" was practiced until lately, but now a bamboo fence separates the sexes, though it does not screen them from view, the fence being only two feet high in bathhouses in the interior of Japan. Some homes have a wooden bathtub, circular shape, with a stove built in one end, which heats the water. The whole family, beginning with the father, bathe in the same water. Sometimes women "tub" themselves and their children outside their doors in the streets where sidewalks should be. The first time a foreigner falls over one of these bathing parties and into the arms of the bather he feels the situation is unique, but by the time he has tumbled over half a dozen he tires of the fun, rubs his shins and makes some very uncomplimentary comment, while the polite little woman underneath squeaks out, "Sayonara" (Sir, please call again), etc.—Baltimore Sun.

What the Mouth Tells.

A certain philosopher declares that a woman is known by her mouth, not by the words that issue therefrom, but by the shape and color of the lips and the lines and dimples that gather about this important feature. He is supported in his theory by physiognomists, who all endeavor to prove that no woman with the small, red lipped "Cupid bow" mouth, so praised in song and story, was ever intellectual or generous of heart, and it is consoling to those whose mouths are not in accordance with the lines of beauty laid down by the poets to be told that a "wide, straight mouth, with strong, white teeth," denotes the woman of superior intelligence, goodness of heart, strength of mind and a thousand and one other sterling qualities which one likes to think she possesses.

It is the fashion at present for women to hold their lips slightly apart. This is supposed to give that innocent, wistful, wondering expression which was the peculiar property of the heroines of old fashioned novels, but which bicycle riding and kindred modern amusements have caused to vanish. It is difficult for the thin lipped, determined woman to acquire this trick, but perseverance works wonders.—Baltimore Herald.

Unappreciated.

The teacher of a district school in Maine tells a story that reminds me of Mary and her little lamb, only it is of Joe and his little dog.

Joe was a boy about 8 years old and was devoted to a small, lank puppy. Out of school hours boy and dog were inseparable, and Joe apparently could not reconcile himself to the necessity of leaving the dog at home. For several mornings the teacher allowed the puppy to remain at Joe's feet under the desk.

Then there came a day when the small dog could not be kept quiet, but frisked about, to the delight of the school and the dismay of the teacher.

"Joe," she said firmly, "you must take that dog out."

Joe looked at her mournfully, but picked up the pup and, with its head against his cheek, started for the door. The boy's feelings were evidently hurt, but he said nothing until he reached the door; then, giving his teacher a reproachful look, with a pitying glance toward his dog, he said slowly, "And he's named for you!"—Youth's Companion.

Oriental Humor.

Some of the similes used by oriental advertisers are as remarkable for humor and naivete as even those of the immortal Sam Weller. Here are one or two specimens which have recently appeared in eastern newspapers:

"Goods dispatched as expeditiously as a cannon ball."

"Parcels done up with as much care as that bestowed on her husband by a loving wife."

"Paper tough as elephant's hide."

"The print of our books is clear as crystal; the matter elegant as a singing girl."

"Customers treated as politely as by the rival steamship companies."

"Silks and satins smooth as a lady's cheek and colored like the rainbow."—London Answers

She Silenced Greeley.

Horace Greeley once had a discussion with an advocate of women's suffrage shortly before the American civil war. He was using as his final argument the inability of women to fight. "What would you do, for instance," he asked his friend, "in the event of war?"

"Just what you would do, Mr. Greeley," she replied promptly. "I should stay in an office and write articles urging other people to go and fight."

Measuring Time.

Just when the day became divided into hours is not known, nor is the process explained. The Greeks and Romans measured time by the water glass and the sun dials. The hourglass, filled with sand, was the outgrowth of these vessels, from which the water dripped through tiny openings.

If a pair of herrings could be left to breed and multiply undisturbed for a period of 20 years, they would yield an amount of fish equal in bulk to the globe on which we live.

Jim Davis went to Chicago with the U. of M. football team, but he has lost his witchery. For years Jim has been looked upon by the university boys as a dispeller of all misfortune, as they had never lost a game while he was at the ringside. We are all sorry Jim's days of power are over.

The high school football team, which made so excellent a record in the season just closed, will begin life next year under serious disadvantages. Of the eleven men who formed the regular team but four or five it is anticipated will return, and there hardly seems material in sight to make up the complement. The four who are practically certain are Captain Lawrence, right tackle; Bice, center; Sherman, quarter; and Green, right guard. Hewitt, the star half back, is not a member of the senior class, but he is as yet undecided whether or not he will continue his high school course. If he does return he will have a good chance of securing the post of captain, as the members who have signified their intention of coming back say their vote will be cast for "Eddie." Lawrence, however, made a very satisfactory leader, and if he wishes reelection, will prove a powerful rival.

Readers of The Daily Telegram will kindly excuse deficiencies for a few days. We have not yet perfected arrangements with our correspondents, so that department will be short for a week or so. Our D. W. Kelly will have charge of the Ann Arbor department, and as he is a stranger in that city his work will not be up to the standard for a time. However, we will give you a paper of which Ypsilanti may be proud, and to which our citizens may subscribe with the feeling that they are helping their city and aiding a local enterprise. Roy Spencer will have charge of our Ypsilanti news columns.

The common council is conducting a "good sidewalk" campaign with considerable vigor, as far as any rate as the passing of resolutions is concerned, yet nevertheless, at tolerable regular intervals they continue to be threatened with damage suits as the result of falls on defective walks. The latest of such communications will be presented to the council this evening by Attorney Lee N. Brown, for his client, Mrs. Barbara Keller, of 850 Railroad street. In her claim Mrs. Keller does not specify the particular walk upon which she sustained the fall, but simply states that on the 20th of August she was injured by reason of a defective walk on Gryve street, near Congress street, and has since that date been confined to her house.

THANKSGIVING
EXERCISESNormal Training School Children
Do Credit to Their Teachers.

Prof. Grawn and an Able Staff of Assistants highly praised for their Good Work.

There were about 200 visitors present at the Thanksgiving exercises given by the pupils of the Normal Training school on Wednesday morning, Nov. 20th. The program was decidedly unique and very interesting, each number calling forth hearty applause from the spectators. The exercises opened with the singing of the long metre Doxology by all present. Irene Clark then recited the typical American Thanksgiving poem, the "Corn Song." The third number on the program, "Pilgrims in Song and Story," was taken care of by the second and third grades and consisted of a series of recitations by children in costumes representing different nations, interspersed with singing by all the members of both grades. The little ones took their respective parts with great credit to themselves and their instructors. In the fourth exercise a man of ye olden times appeared in answer to a wish expressed by a maiden of the nineteenth century, who in company with two members of the sterner sex, were dressed for a game of golf. The ancient visitor could not understand the telegraph, telephone, friction matches, etc., of today, and retired saying that he was too slow for this age of Yankee ingenuity. "The Pilgrim Maids" were represented by twelve girls of the fourth grade, their description being given in a recitation by another member of the grade. The manual at arms was well executed by thirteen boys of the sixth grade in the "Miles Standish Drill." The young lads went through the drill with accuracy that would have been commendable to a body of older and more experienced persons. The ninth number was a very pleasing one, being a description by five girls of the seventh and eighth grades, in the costumes of the nations respectively represented, of the Thanksgiving of the Jewish, Greek, Roman, English and Puritan nations. The wand drill, given by twenty members of the sixth grade, was very appropriate for a Thanksgiving entertainment, the participants having their heads incased in masks representing pumpkins, and using cornstalks for wands. The wands exercise was well executed, and the comical appearance of the company caused considerable merriment. The closing tableau represented the embarking of a band of pilgrims in the "Speedwell," their friends gathering to bid them god speed. The exercises were interspersed with chorus singing by members of the different grades.

The visitors were all highly pleased with the exercises, and Prof. Grawn and his able assistant received many congratulations on the success of the entertainment.
